

Bail can now be denied

By R. SCOTT GASSMAN

and The Associated Press

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that people accused of crimes and deemed dangerous to the community may now legally be denied bail. The court said that community safety can outweigh the rights of a criminal defendant to remain free while awaiting trial.

"There is no doubt that preventing danger to the community is a legitimate regulatory goal," said Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist in his opinion for the court.

"Congress did not formulate the pre-trial detention provisions as punishment for dangerous individuals. Congress instead perceived pre-trial detention as a potential solution to a pressing societal problem," said Rehnquist.

Before the passing of the new law, bail generally was denied only if the accused was believed likely to flee.

Judges would often get around the old law by setting very high bails which the 'dangerous' defendant could not afford to pay, and would therefore keep the defendant behind bars until he was able to pay. The new law will allow the court to be upfront and deny bail to these individuals. Rehnquist also stated that the Constitution does not mandate that preventive detention be exclusively tied to bail and defendants who would likely flee.

The Eighth Amendment to the Constitution forbids excessive bail, said Rehnquist. But that only means that when bail is used to restrain a defendant who is likely to flee, the bail cannot be intended to have any other purpose, such as punishment to that person.

"We believe that when Congress has mandated detention on the basis of a compelling interest other than prevention of flight, as it has here, the Eighth Amendment does not require release on bail," said Rehnquist.

Justice Thurgood Marshall, in the dissenting opinion, said that laws that impose preventive detention "have long been thought incompatible with the fundamental human rights protected by our Constitution."

Marshall said he found the preventive detention laws tyrannical.

The new law passed with a 6 - 3 vote. Others dissenting were Justices William J. Brennan and John Paul Stevens.

According to Ed Kimball, professor of law at BYU, "Preventive detention could be justified under some circumstances, but they would have to be very extreme."

"For example, the fact that a suspect might write another bad check would not justify preventive detention, while the possibility he would commit a crime of violence might justify it."

Tuesday's ruling overturned a decision last July 3 by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York City.

The appeals court ruled that Anthony "Fat Tony" Salerno, reputed boss of the Genovese crime family, and Vincent Cafaro, a reputed captain of the crime syndicate, were entitled to bail. However, this decision was stayed pending the decision, leaving the two men behind bars.

Government prosecutors had argued that Salerno and Cafaro were dangerous because of their suspected affiliations with the underworld and should be denied bail on that reason.

U.S. Attorney Randolph Giuliani of New York City said, "The court's upholding of the statute is helpful in the government's effort against dangerous criminals and drug dealers."

"The primary focus of the 1984 statute was on detaining before trial those who, by their previous conduct, have proven that they will endanger others while out on bail."

Administrators meet to discuss transfer policies

By KAREN JOHNSON
Universe Staff Writer

Utah business educators met recently to discuss and work out the major problems facing students transferring from two-year to four-year colleges.

The meeting included deans, associate deans, division chairmen and advisement personnel from Utah colleges and institutes and Ricks College in Idaho. It was necessary because "We want to be able to try and solve problems before they are created," said Gary F. McKinnon, associate dean of the School of Management.

During the meeting the major problems of transferring were identified. "The biggest, specifically, was two-year college students finding their credits weren't accepted," said Brent Harker, assistant director of public communication. "Four-year colleges have certain requirements for a degree. Students start at a two-year college, then come here and their courses are not accepted."

Because a growing number of students are transferring from two-year to four-year colleges, the business school administrators hope the new policies will reduce the number of problems encountered by students.

Another problem, according to McKinnon, is to "open up communications." To illustrate this point, he said, "All must finish a calculus course before entering into the business program. Our students know that, but others may not. We need to communicate more to eliminate problems."

In the future there will be a meeting each spring to discuss the changes in requirements and to finalize transfer policies. "We will be meeting to communicate the major changes. We will try to reach agreements of which credits will transfer and are equivalent," said McKinnon.

Four missionaries head for class at the Missionary Training Center. A documentary that aired recently on PBS explored the pressures placed on young men who become missionaries. The movie has been called biased by the LDS Church.

LDS documentary criticized by leaders

By MARK MCLAUGHLIN
Universe Staff Writer

A Public Broadcasting Service television documentary on missionaries of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is unbalanced and inaccurate, according to officials of the LDS Church and the National Conferences of Christians and Jews (NCCJ).

An official LDS Church statement said that LDS Church authorities are, "disappointed that the documentary placed an unbalanced emphasis on ... a small minority who for one reason or another expressed dissatisfaction with their missionary experience."

Don LeFevre, LDS Church spokesman, also noted that missionaries not completing their two-year service involved only 2 percent, or 600 out of 30,000, and that half of that number withdrew for health reasons.

Another voice is accusing the film of lopsided representation.

NCCJ President Jacqueline Wexler said, "We viewed the film. Having had a great deal of interaction with leadership of the LDS Church, we felt strongly that the impression given was not accurate based on our experience."

Wexler also said the documentary lacks balance and develops a "caricature from an old tintype" rather than what's happening now.

NCCJ began its relationship with the LDS Church three years ago when its Phoenix chapter was asked by local clergy to watch an anti-LDS film, "The Godmakers," said Wexler.

After stating that the film was a "serious characterization," stereotyping members of the LDS Church,

NCCJ was sued by producers of "The Godmakers."

Wexler said she considered the lawsuit a nuisance, but not wanting to be intimidated, she defended her position.

Elder David B. Haight of the LDS Council of Twelve personally thanked Wexler in her New York office for defending the LDS Church.

"I felt so comfortable with Elder Haight that I said, 'I am sensitive of how other groups perceive us (NCCJ). Some groups are concerned how we view the missionary efforts of the Mormon Church,' she said."

Wexler said a conversation with a pair of young missionaries bound for their new assignments in the field convinced her that what the LDS hierarchy was saying about their church was true.

She did not initially reveal who she was, in order to test how the missionaries would treat her. She asked who the young men were and what they did.

They explained briefly that they were going to a place away from home to knock on doors and teach people about their church. "Pretend that I am the lady on the other side of the door," Wexler suggested.

She listened to them present a brief discussion about Jesus Christ. Then Wexler said to one of the missionaries, "Suppose I say, 'How would you like to hear about my religion?'"

One of the missionaries explained that he received strict training in the Missionary Training Center that he should try to fill spiritual emptiness and not dissuade others from their own faith, said Wexler.

"(LDS Church authorities are) disappointed that the (film) placed an unbalanced emphasis on ... a small minority who for one reason or another expressed dissatisfaction with their (mission) experience."

Loan process streamlined

The Financial Aid Office has developed a new booklet that should simplify the financial-aid application process.

"Financial aid has become very complex for a couple of reasons," said Ford L. Stevenson, director of Student Financial Aid at BYU. "There are a number of different programs students can apply for. There are different procedures the students use in applying for those programs."

"In the past we had numerous forms. We had an application for scholarships, we had an application for loans, we had an application for a Pell Grant. It was really confusing for students."

"They would come up to the financial aid window and say, 'I want to apply for a loan.' They weren't sure if they wanted a BYU loan or a Guaranteed Student Loan, or sometimes they didn't really want a loan at all; they wanted a Pell Grant. We would hand them what we thought they wanted, based on their questions. Then they would come back two weeks later and say, 'This isn't what I wanted at all,'" said Stevenson.

Because of the confusion, Stevenson said he and the financial aid counselors felt that "we had an obligation as a financial aid office to simplify the whole process as much as possible."

To develop the new financial aid application, all the then-existing applications were synthesized into one form. According to Stevenson, "The new packet is not just an application, it is a description of all the programs that are available, how the student applies, what the deadlines are, and how the programs function. Now when the student picks up a financial aid application, he walks away with a fairly comprehensive booklet on financial aid at BYU."

Another advantage of the new financial aid application is reduced processing time. In the past, if students used a Pell Grant application, and completed the need-analysis form, it took approximately six weeks for them to get any information from the federal government.

BYU's Financial Aid Office learned that the company which administers the American College Test was in a position to offer a service that would analyze the student's need-analysis form, put the information on a computer and transmit that information over the telephone to BYU's computer. ACT guaranteed a four-day processing time from the time they received the information.

"Because of the turn-around time, it was decided that it would be in the best interests of BYU and the best interests of the student if we asked all students to process their forms through ACT," said Stevenson.

The only disadvantage of processing the forms through ACT is that the student has to pay a processing fee. "After many days of discussion, and with the concurrence of the administration of BYU, we felt that it would be in the best interests of the students to pay that fee to get the information here quickly so that we could meet the deadlines and have the Pell Grant and GSL money here when school started, as opposed to December."

Students who are eligible for a Pell Grant or GSL, and have met the deadlines, will have their money available to meet the fall tuition payment deadline. Students will no longer have to request payment from the processing center in Maryland after the semester has started. BYU will automatically take the tuition money and put it directly toward the student's tuition. Any money that is left over after tuition is paid can go toward housing if a student is living in on-campus housing, or a check can be made out directly to the student for the remainder of Pell Grant or the GSL.

If the money is available before the semester begins many students will no longer have a need for a BYU short term loan. However, short term loans will still be available in some circumstances.

Students having questions about financial aid can visit the Financial Aid Office in A-41 ASB or call ext. 4104.

Benton Livery starts new business

A white carriage and the echo of hooves bring a familiar sight to the 1890s to Provo streets in the Glade Tuckett and his partner, Alan Dye, started a horse-and-carriage business called Benton Livery five weeks ago in Provo.

The white carriage, with a tuxedo driver, adds an air of elegance to the hustle and bustle of the downtown streets.

One rider dismounted from the carriage, she exclaimed that the ride "makes life seem simple, takes the busyness out of life."

Carolyn Schloss gives a friendly and informative tour of downtown Provo. Heads turn as the carriage rolls down the street and people wave and say "hi" as it passes by. Schloss often stops to talk to people who display interest in the horse and carriage.

Schloss, who trained horses before working for Benton Livery, told of arriving at a young lady's address as part of the festivities for an evening.

A short time after the date began the young man proposed to her in the romantic setting of the carriage ride.

Benton Livery currently has two carriages, and is in the process of acquiring a third.

The horses that are being used have been gathered from various places, with the gray one being bought from the Amish.

Benton Livery, although recently started, has a long history in Utah County, beginning with Glade Tuck-ett's grandfather, Benton Brown.

Brown owned and operated the original Benton Livery in Spanish Fork during the 1890s.

The livery provided the majority of transportation for the surrounding area, including a taxi-like operation using horse-drawn buggies which were more commonly referred to as "hacks."

The business provided mail express and freight delivery to Mapleton, Salem, and Spanish Fork.

The livery also had a horse-drawn hearse that was rented to the surrounding communities.

Benton Livery has four staging areas: the Excelsior Hotel, Cottontree Inn, the Ernest L. Wilkinson Center and the BYU Campus.

The carriages can also be mounted as they circle their timed routes.

Gunmen wound U.S. officials in Cairo

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Gunmen pulled alongside a U.S. Embassy station wagon Tuesday, tried to force it off the road and then opened fire, blowing out the windows and slightly wounding two of the three Americans inside.

A U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the men escaped because embassy security chief Dennis L. Williams used "defensive driving measures" to get away from the other car — a U-turn on the eight-lane highway along the Nile's east bank.

It was the first attack in memory on American officials in Egypt.

Several hours afterward, an anonymous telephone caller to a Western news agency said it was the work of Egypt's Revolution, a shadowy group which has claimed responsibility for three attacks on Israeli Embassy personnel that killed two people.

Foreign Minister Esmat Abdel-Meguid's office said he asked U.S. Ambassador Frank G. Wisner to inform Secretary of State George P. Shultz of Egypt's regret and assure him "that authorities are doing their utmost to apprehend the culprits."

A warning from the U.S. Embassy urged Americans "to exercise an extreme degree of caution" in the next four of five days, avoiding crowds and "inappropriate gatherings."

U.S. officials said "increased security is in effect for the embassy."

Four injured in plane crash near Ogden

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — The conditions of three of the four Californians hurt when a small airplane crash landed on the roof of a vacant building and careened through a shed here were upgraded Tuesday, authorities said.

Pilot Billy Ray Stephens, 56, of Cloverdale, and his wife Charlotte, 55, both were in fair condition at St. Benedict's Hospital, said spokeswoman Julie Huss.

Stephens initially had been listed in critical condition. Mrs. Stephens had been in serious condition on Monday, Huss said.

Meantime, Harold Wilkinson, 69, of Coarsegold, remained in serious but stable condition, while his wife, Juanema, 63, was upgraded from serious to satisfactory, McKay-Dee Hospital reported Tuesday.

The passengers suffered multiple bruises and abrasions to the head, face and chest, said Ogden Police Lt. Charles Buzick.

The four were en route from Onamia, Minn., to Santa Rosa, Calif., when the plane blew a piston in Ogden Canyon and lost power over Huntsville, 13 miles east of Ogden.

Senior Iraqis meet with U.S. officials

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Americans investigating the Iraqi attack on the USS Stark met with defense officials Tuesday, but there was no word on whether they would be allowed to see the pilot who fired the missiles.

A diplomatic source said that "everything seems to be going well" in the joint investigation of the May 17 attack in the Persian Gulf, which killed 37 American sailors on the guided-missile frigate, and wounded 21 sailors.

Unconfirmed reports in the Iraqi capital Tuesday said the pilot had been beheaded, apparently for embarrassing President Saddam Hussein's government. Information Ministry officials denied it.

The eight-man U.S. team led by Rear Adm. David Rogers, deputy director of operations for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, spent several hours with senior Iraqi officials Tuesday morning.

Afterward, they drove in a motorcade to the fortified U.S. Embassy for meetings with American officials and communication with Washington, diplomatic sources said.

Neither the Americans nor Iraqis would comment on the discussions.

Cannon pleads guilty to reduced charges

Former Salt Lake County Attorney Ted Cannon on Tuesday pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of attempted misuse of public funds and no contest to reduced counts of assault stemming from sexual harassment charges brought by women who worked for him.

Cannon, 55, entered the pleas in separate appearances before 3rd District Judges Homer Wilkinson and Leonard Russon. He said afterward he wasn't guilty but had run out of money to defend himself.

Cannon originally was charged by a Salt Lake County grand jury with two counts of forcible sexual abuse of former secretaries Shauna Clark and Debra Sauers. Each count was reduced to misdemeanor assault in the plea arrangement made public Tuesday.

Charges of misuse of public money, a second-degree felony, and unauthorized use of public money, a third-degree felony, were reduced to a single combined misdemeanor count of attempted misuse of public money.

Former highway patrolman sentenced

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Ernest Wilcock, the former Utah Highway Patrol trooper accused of using his badge to prey on women, was sentenced Tuesday to zero to five years in prison for attempted forcible sexual abuse.

Wilcock, led into Judge Timothy Hanson's courtroom in handcuffs, showed no emotion as the sentence was handed down. The judge also ordered that Wilcock undergo psychiatric counseling.

Wilcock's defense attorney, Ronald Stranger, had pleaded for leniency, telling the judge that his client is a good father of five children who need him, a good husband and a good trooper.

In April, Wilcock agreed to plead guilty to the attempted sexual abuse charge in exchange for prosecutors dropping two counts of rape, two counts of aggravated kidnapping and one count of aggravated assault.

Wilcock was charged in February with aggravated rape and aggravated kidnapping stemming from an incident involving a 27-year-old Salt Lake County woman.

The trooper was accused of stopping the woman last September and threatening to arrest her and take her children away if she did not submit to his sexual advances.

City discusses Academy Square future

By A. CORY MALOY
Universe Staff Writer

Provo City Council members listened to a presentation about the progress of the redevelopment of the former Brigham Young Academy during a study meeting Tuesday.

Craig Call, project coordinator, was interested in getting support from the council, and in obtaining a list of city regulations that could be followed while redeveloping Academy Square.

"We're talking about the city having a joint venture role (in the redevelopment of Academy Square)," said Call.

Construction on the Academy could start as soon as this summer. Call plans to restore the existing buildings and add other buildings that will be used for commercial businesses.

He said 144 one-bedroom apartments will be built to attract senior citizens or young BYU married couples who meet the standards for low-income families.

"We will first attract the senior citizens, but if we don't get enough we will allow young married couples who are students to live there. As the young couples move out, senior citizens will be admitted first," said Call.

He said it would not be economical to build apartments suited to single BYU students.

Council members expressed their desire to help with the restoration of Academy Square, but showed concern of the risk involved to the city. They wanted Call to show the possible returns to the city in property and sales tax revenues.

"The city has some responsibility to help preserve Academy Square," said Provo Mayor Joseph Jenkins.

City Council members also discussed making a future resolution of automating the garbage collection system.

The ordinance will get rid of residential garbage cans and replace them with one 90-gallon container for each household. The containers will be picked up by a mechanical arm that will dump the contents into a truck.

Jenkins said the new system will save the city $179,176 annually by reducing the number of trucks, drivers and routes. He said other benefits would include fewer injuries to employees because they will be able to stay in the truck. It would also be more difficult for dogs to get into the containers.

Orem City Council

approves '87-88 budget

By MATHEW J. STUCKI
Universe Staff Writer

The city council approved the 1987-88 Orem City Budget of $23,718,769 Tuesday including a reallocation of $99,000 from city personnel pay hikes to general fund operations and capital improvements.

The salary hike included a cost of living increase, but no real increase from last year's salaries due to inflation costs, according to council members.

One member of the council, however, S. Harley Gillman, said he has stayed awake nights worrying about the salary increases of city employees and asked the council to reconsider the increases.

"The salary increases are not justified," said Gillman.

After some deliberation, the council approved a reallocation of $77,000 to the general fund operations and $22,000 to capital improvements.

The total 1987-88 budget is approximately $5.5 million less than last years budget.

Mayor S. Blaine Willes said that there has been no increase in sales, franchise, or property taxes this year, but that isolated fee increases have been adopted, such as a utility hookup charge.

In a public hearing conducted during the meeting, the council heard comments from Orem residents concerning the proposed budget. One Orem resident requested that the city make personnel cutbacks and become more thrifty with government funds.

Another resident raised a question about the city requiring bicycle dealers to collect bicycle registration fee charges. He requested the government take care of this collection.

Finally, a resident questioned the council allocating $20,000 of Orem funds for the Provo Chamber of Commerce.

According to an Orem City budget summary, 44.3 percent of the approved budget has been allocated for city personnel costs, 29.6 percent for operation expenses and 26.1 for capital improvements.

The council meeting also included a motion to approve a capital improvements bonding program of $100 million, but council members did not approve this program.

Board feuds over keys

By MARK McLAUGHLIN
Universe Staff Writer

Dressed in her Sunday best, complete with corsage, Paula Trewartha, a teacher at Vineyard Elementary school for 23 years came to confront the members of the Alpine school board last night.

"Taking our keys away for the summer is viewed as mistrustful to teachers who have served loyally for all these years, we are upset," said Trewartha.

The public feedback session of the Alpine School Board meeting in Orem turned into a squabble over keys among employees.

Donna Sandstrom, president of the Alpine Classified Association, pleaded for an end of the feud between the board members and the teachers.

"Custodial crews will be rotating from school to school throughout the summer. Access to the classrooms must be limited, or a room cleaned in July will look dirty again in August when it comes time for school to start," said Sandstrom. "This is a pilot project and everybody needs to cooperate, help, and get on the same team."

In an effort to cut down on the size of the summer custodial crews, "the board has opened up a can of worms," according to Rial Allen, Alpine Education Association president.

"The key thing is really not a big deal, but the board is allowing school principals to be dictatorial about the keys," added Allen.

Dr. C.L. Cox, district superintendent, said that the district gave broad guidelines to the principals that they should not be so strict with the keys. "We left the policy open to individual principals," he said.

Cox said that if the program were successful, the savings would be $700,000 per year to go into the general fund to buy books, pay teacher's salaries, and fund other programs that are in desperate need.

Cox also said that the state recommendation was to bid out the individual schools to professional cleaning services.

"We would like to keep our custodial employees and eliminate them by attrition, not by firing or laying off," said Cox.

Students to visit England for study of British writers

By ANN B. SOUTH
Universe Staff Writer

In "The Prelude," William Wordsworth wrote of mountains, lakes, mists and winds "that dwell among hills where I was born." Nine BYU students, along with English professors Brian and Lorna Best, will have an opportunity to visit the land that inspired Wordsworth as part of BYU's British Master Works program during Summer term.

The program begins with three weeks of intensive study and then the students complete the term in England. Gordon Thomas, a BYU English professor, said the class will be a study of Wordsworth and his contemporaries, including Blake, Shelley and Byron. Thomas directed the program for three years. The Bests will be co-directors this year.

The program began in 1982 when Thomas was invited to lecture at the Wordsworth Summer Conference in Grasmere. The annual conference is directed by Richard Wordsworth, great-great grandson of William Wordsworth, and consists of world-renowned lecturers in English literature. Thomas and BYU English professor John B. Harris decided it would be a good opportunity to take some students to the conference.

Marj Hermansen, a BYU graduate student in English from Orem, participated in the first trip to England. She said she wanted to visit the places she had read about all her life.

"All the slides, all the pictures, all the movies don't do it justice," Hermansen said.

She said the Wordsworth conference was the highlight of the trip. Hermansen had the opportunity to meet scholars who treated the students as equals. Thomas said that students and scholars talk to each other on a first-name basis.

"It's a people-to-people thing instead of who's smarter than who," Hermansen said.

Hermansen teaches English 115 and was a teaching assistant for a Shakespeare class last semester. She said her experiences in England have helped her teach literature.

"I'm now a teacher and I can see the value in that full 180-degree learning process," Hermansen said.

"Reading it, seeing it, and writing about it makes it come alive a lot more."

Hermansen went back to England in 1985 as the assistant director of the study group. In addition to the conference, she said she enjoyed the walks through the English Lake District near Wordsworth's home because Wordsworth and his country was important to him.

"English majors who are really serious about getting in touch with English literature need to have this type of experience," she said. Shawn Bentley of Provo, a 1986 BYU graduate, participated in the 1986 program. Bentley felt the Wordsworth Conference was one of his best experiences during the trip.

He said the conference gave him an opportunity to both meet "the world's great minds" and walk "around the area where the great poets were inspired."

Bentley recommends the program to anyone who is in literature. He said the English department offers scholarships or grants to qualified students.

Brian Best said this summer's trip will include visits to Oxford, Stratford on Avon, Winchester, York, Bath and Ayot St. Lawrence. He noted that Ayot St. Lawrence is the home of George Bernard Shaw, whom Best studied in England for a year while working on his doctorate degree.

The Wordsworth Summer Conference will include lectures by German, English, American and Canadian scholars. Their topics include the poetry of Blake, Coleridge and Wordsworth. Thomas said BYU professors have lectured in the past and BYU students have presented papers.

"BYU's role at the conference is quite an important one," he said.

"All the slides, all the pictures, all the movies don't do it justice."

Rex Cates, BYU botany professor, rears budworms in the branches of Douglas fir to see how the tree's chemistry interacts with that of the insects.

Nature's way best Y botanist researches pest control

By KIMBERLY HYMAS
Universe Staff Writer

BYU plant ecologist is researching what could be the key to understanding defense mechanisms in plants and their interaction with the environment.

Rex G. Cates, professor of botany and range science, has been working on natural plant chemistry and its relation to organic defense mechanisms since 1968.

"They (defense mechanisms) work on our homeostatic and immune systems," said Cates.

Cates and his associates are studying the devastating effects that the budworm and the bark beetle have made on forest regions in the United States and Canada. "This budworm is a very serious problem," said Cates. "It is a mass-attack affair."

In the past, insect problems have been dealt with by using insecticides to kill off entire populations of insects, according to Cates.

Plants never defend themselves as we do when we use insecticides," said Cates. "We kill every bug out there. The plants use a more subtle effect."

Plants control insects naturally by using the majority of enemies with use of internal chemicals.

According to Cates, man-made processes for killing insects "select for resistance." This means that, in the end, faster growth of the species will occur.

"Natural systems have been here longer than we have," said Cates. "We should use those systems as an example."

"All of our research is directly applicable to forest and agricultural systems," said Cates. "If my research isn't applicable to humans, it's not worth it."

Man-made fire control poses a problem for forests. "I think that one of our biggest mistakes was controlling fire," said Cates. "The general feeling now is that fire is a good thing. It doesn't allow insects to build up. Diversity and variation is critical."

Another problem involved in the depletion of many national forest areas is the fact that when trees get old, their defense systems shut down like human systems, according to Cates. "Somewhere between 90 and 120 years of age a tree will lose its defense mechanism," said Cates. "They basically get senile."

Cates and his associates are learning about the enemies that attack plants and how to protect our forest and agricultural regions from these attacks.

"The next thing is to try to apply our knowledge to management of forests," said Cates. "We want to publish our ideas to help others with agricultural possibilities."

Sunday School fills needs of handicapped

The spiritual aspects of mentally handicapped people's lives are often neglected because of the demands in other areas, according to an employee at the Lindon Care and Training Center.

Michelle Holmes said that those involved with the mentally handicapped are so busy teaching them behavioral, intellectual, and social skills it becomes difficult to meet the spiritual needs of these people.

Angela Arnita, director of the Sunday School program at the Utah State Training School, and seven other volunteers teach at the Training School on Sunday.

Arnita said that church is different from the Training School because it is geared for the comprehension level of the mentally handicapped.

She also said that teaching can be difficult, but it is helpful to realize the importance of the calling. The students often have problems understanding the lessons, but someday they will be able to understand and they also need opportunities to progress while in this life, said Arnita.

"The population at the school is getting smaller," said Arnita. "Those handicapped people who can take care of themselves are being moved into group homes."

A group home is one in which a family agrees to take one or more handicapped persons into their home. Arnita said that it is hard when the handicapped are moved because there is no way of knowing if they are being taken to church regularly.

Michael Ray, a volunteer with the Sunday School program at the Training School, said he wanted to do something more with his Sabbath, and teaching the handicapped gave him that fulfillment.

Arnita said that more volunteers are needed for the Sunday program. For more information contact AS-BYU Community Services.

Local theater presents LDS life

By SUSAN POTTER
Universe Staff Writer

Theater-in-the-Square in downtown Provo brings Latter-day Saint drama to the stage.

The theater is located on the third floor of Provo Town Square. One of its original productions, "Matters of the Heart" was recently reproduced at BYU.

BYU graduate and LDS playwright Thomas Duncan is part owner of the theater.

He said he started the community theater because there were not enough outlets for his plays to be seen.

"Outside of BYU there's not a lot of opportunity to do plays for LDS people without spending a lot of money or touring," he said.

The business started two years ago in a 35-seat theater with no heat. Duncan produced six plays there, which did well enough for him to pay expenses and share some of the profits with his actors.

After seeing Duncan's play "Matters of the Heart" performed at the theater, a member of the audience approached Duncan about investing in the business.

Shortly after, the company moved to the intimate 51-seat theater they now perform in.

Dave Hamilton is the executive producer for Theater-in-the-Square, an organization that produces plays on LDS lifestyles.

Duncan said he is satisfied with the present location. "I like live intimate theater," he said. "I would like, of course, to do a bigger play, but you lose something in a large theater."

According to Duncan, the theater has a problem with public misconception.

He said some people think they will see "roadshow drama" and others think they will see something anti-Mormon. "They come to find out that we do challenging LDS drama without insulting anyone," he said.

The plays at Theater-in-the-Square are written, directed, casted, and co-produced by Duncan.

He said most writers do not like to do this, but that he is not always satisfied when his plays are done by other people.

Duncan also said it is hard to produce in the shadow of BYU because people perceive his plays as student productions.

"Student plays are done extremely well," he said, "but those people are still learning and I am a professional." Duncan said he casts students and local people in his plays, but that the plays are done professionally.

Duncan graduated from BYU's drama program with an emphasis in play writing.

'Furs' flare at Fairgrounds

By BILL NELSON
Universe Staff Writer

The Coliseum at the Utah State Fairgrounds suited the Psychedelic Furs well Monday night.

Adorned with a diesel garage flair, the seasoned building complemented the back-alley, rock-rooted band. But rockers not familiar with the Furs probably struggled through the concert.

Problems with the acoustics and a conflict between vocals and guitar produced a mish-mash sound that kept many concert goers in their seats.

Furs followers, however, recognized most of the songs from the "Forever Now" and "Mirror Moves" albums, and the Furs fans jammed and slammed throughout the evening.

Concert fever was slow burning at first, following the irritating wail of the opening band, A Shot In the Dark. After their first number, fans were hoping for a real shot in the dark that would drop the lead singer and put him and the audience out of misery.

So the impatient crowd, burnt out on guitar screech, reacted a bit sluggishly during a highly visual, but somewhat lackluster Psychedelic Furs opener.

CONCERT REVIEW

But as the Furs moved into their more recent cuts, the concert accelerated.

Psychedelic die-hards rocked to unconsciousness as stagehands plucked limp bodies from the front row — a rock 'n roll sandwich. Slam dancers cruised for bruises.

And even Furs neophytes mustered a tap in their feet and a whistle or two for the Furs' lead singer, Richard Butler.

Certainly at home in the aging coliseum, Butler, 33, showed time lines of his own. After five albums and regular world tours, he wore the wrinkles of a seasoned musician. But fans couldn't judge Butler by his cover. The animated singer dazzled fans with his purple-and red-lighted stage theatrics.

Providing the backbone to the Furs timeless sound, lead guitarist John Ashton rattled the woodwork with his high-energy play.

Midway through the concert, one fan tossed a white rose to Ashton. The Rob Lowe (minus one spitters-gap) look-alike, stuck the stem between his guitar strings. Then he rocked the petals off.

The audience may have been shortchanged. The show was relatively short, one and one-half hours. Even the two ovations only initiated two songs on the first return, and only one song on the second.

Tell a rock-hungry crowd quality not quantity? Probably not, but that was the case.

Temple Square celebrates Piano Month

June is Piano Month in Utah, and, as one of the sponsors of Piano Month, the Temple Square Concert Series is featuring some of the world's foremost concert pianists.

Tickets are not required for the concerts, as the performances are sponsored by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The following calendar briefly describes some of the musical events for the first two weeks of June. All performances will be in the Assembly Hall:

June 5 — Mormon Youth Symphony and Chorus

June 6 — University of Utah A Cappella Choir: The bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution will be the theme of this concert. The choir will perform two uniquely American works — "The Unknown" by Michael Hennagin and "The Testament of Freedom" by Randall Thompson.

June 9 — James Barbagallo, Piano: Barbagallo, will perform "Sonata No. 26, Op. 81a" by Beethoven, four movements from "Klavierstucke, Op. 76" by Brahms, and "Pictures at an Exhibition" by Moussorgsky. Barbagallo has earned both bachelor's and master's degrees from the Juilliard School.

June 10 — Alec Chien, Piano: Chien is an artist of international reputation. He is head of the piano program at Allegheny College in Meadville, Pa. His program will feature music by Bartok, Rorem, Mozart, and Schumann.

June 12 — Faina Lustak, Piano: this Russian born pianist is head of the piano division at Tulane University in New Orleans, and is also a published composer. She will perform an all-Chopin program, including waltzes, mazurkas and other Chopin works.

NCAA finals end for Lady Netters

By SUSAN M. GAVOS
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU women's tennis team came home tasting the bitter and the sweet after the quarterfinals of the NCAA Tennis Championships in Los Angeles.

BYU's doubles team of Lesley Hakala and Michelle Taylor gave a strong showing Wednesday, but were unable to bounce back from a slow start. They lost 6-0, 7-6, (7-3) to Miami's Ronni Reis and Lisa Gregory in quarterfinal play.

"Gregory and Reis are a fine team. They're the only team we've played that has two lefties. It's very difficult to play them because the angles are so different. Also lefties have the best spin serves, and that makes them hard to break," said Cougar Head Coach Ann Valentine. Hakala and Taylor advanced to the quarterfinals of the championships by defeating USIS's Sylvie Petreusit and Claire Thompson 6-3, 6-4 Tuesday afternoon.

The victory captured All-American honors for the BYU pair.

"I thought we worked well together. We won the big points and didn't get down. We kept aggressive and hung in there," said Hakala.

"The girls put the ball away when they had to. They hustled for everything. This is a good, sound team. They're well balanced and match smart," added Valentine.

The tennis team finished the season with an overall 24-4 record. The NCAA Tournament concludes the season for the Cougars.

Lakers wait after Sonic sweep

SEATTLE (AP) — James Worthy continued his hot scoring with 26 points Monday, and the Los Angeles Lakers devastated Seattle with a 22-5 second-quarter spurt that lifted them to a 133-102 victory and a 4-0 sweep of the NBA Western Conference finals.

The Lakers, winners of 11 of 12 playoff games, advance to the championship series against either Boston or Detroit.

The finals will start either Sunday or Monday, depending on whether the Lakers-Pistons series, currently tied 2-2, goes six or seven games.

Worthy, who led the Lakers in all 11 games against Seattle, finished with 22 points in the series. Magic Johnson had 21 points Monday and 12 points, 11 in the first half, and Byron Scott and A.C. Green scored 19 points each.

From Chambers led Seattle with 20 points and Xavier McDaniel, who had a career-high 42 in Seattle's 122-121 defeat in Game 3, had 18.

A 10-3 spurt helped Seattle cut an early 15-point deficit to 46-40 with 6:51 left in the second period.

Then Los Angeles, which won 26 more games than the Sonics during the regular season, turned the game into a rout.

The Lakers made nine of 10 field goal attempts during the 22-5 run, including seven layups, a dunk by Worthy and a 3-point goal by Scott.

The decisive spurt made the score 68-45 with 1:03 left in the half.

The Sonics, who got no closer than 17 in the second half, shot 32 percent from the field in the second period.

Worthy scored 11 points and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, eight, as Los Angeles grabbed a 37-22 lead in the first 10½ minutes before settling for a 39-28 advantage after one period.

Chambers, who totaled only 15 points in seven consecutive quarters in Games 2 and 3, had 11 points and five rebounds in the period for the Sonics.

No matter who the Lakers play, they will be healthy, rested and ready to run.

LA's Magic Johnson heads All-NBA team

NEW YORK (AP) — Guard Magic Johnson of the Los Angeles Lakers, who last week was named the NBA's Most Valuable Player, was the only unanimous choice on the 1987 All-NBA team announced Tuesday.

Joining Johnson on the team were guard Michael Jordan of the Chicago Bulls, center Akeem Olajuwon of the Houston Rockets and forwards Larry Bird and Kevin McHale of the Boston Celtics.

Johnson, who averaged a career-high 23.9 points and league-leading 12.2 assists per game, received 156 points in voting by a nationwide panel of 78 reporters who cover the NBA.

Johnson led the Lakers to the best regular-season record in the NBA, 65-17.

Jordan, who led the league in scoring with a 37.1 average, was the runner-up in the voting, with 154 points. Two voters left Jordan off their first team.

Bird received 151 points and was named to the first team by 73 voters. Olajuwon had 130 points and McHale 125.

Johnson and Bird were the only repeaters from last year's first team.

Voted to the second-team were forwards Dominique Wilkins of Atlanta and Charles Barkley of Philadelphia, center Moses Malone of Washington, and guards Isiah Thomas of Detroit and Lafayette Lever of Denver.

Indy 500 winner Al Unser looking for employment

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Al Unser isn't sure he'll get back into an Indy car before he goes for a record fifth Indianapolis 500 triumph next May. His son, Al Jr., is trying to help him find work.

A hand-lettered sign displayed Monday on Al Jr.'s team bus told the story.

"Real race driver needs work. Recent '500' experience. Inquire within," it said.

Roger Penske, who hired Unser after Danny Ongais was injured in a practice accident, said Monday that he planned to offer Unser an Indy 500 ride in a Penske car next year.

"I believe everything possible should be done to have the Indy 500 champion defend his victory," said Penske. "If Al can't find something else he likes for next year, he would be welcome on our team. Al is a team member. He works well with us and yesterday wasn't our first success with him."

Penske also said he planned to discuss having Unser drive two more races for his team this year.

"I would certainly hope we would run him for the Triple Crown in the three 500s (Michigan and Pocono are the others), but we don't plan anything else at this point," said Penske, who got his sixth Indy victory as an owner when Unser capitalized on the misfortunes of Mario Andretti and Roberto Guerrero, to join A.J. Foyt as a four-time 500 winner.

Unser, who will be 48 Friday, left the Penske team last year hoping to drive the entire Indy circuit.

Penske was unable to offer him that kind of deal because he already had two-time Indy 500 winner Rick Mears and 1985 winner Danny Sullivan under contract and didn't want to race three cars all year.

"I want to run all the time. I want a full-time deal," Unser said. "I found out last year I didn't want to quit."

"I had several offers (this year) but they weren't what I was looking for."

Despite the victory, Unser isn't expecting to find a full-time ride at this stage of the season.

"I don't know where they would come from," he said. "There's not that many car owners, and the teams that had problems yesterday are set."

A possibility is Porsche, which plans to join the Indy-car circuit in time for the final three races.

"I have no idea about that," Unser said, adding that he would welcome the chance to drive for the new team.

"I'd love to see Porsche come in. I've said earlier that I wish all manufacturers would come into this racing."

Writings are legacy

Nibley's works compiled

By ROBERT C. GRAHAM
Universe Staff Writer

Several BYU professors said the compilation of Hugh Nibley's writings could be extremely valuable to Church historians and defenders of the The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

"Hugh Nibley has left a significant legacy," said John Welch, who is compiling the volumes of Nibley's unpublished notes, lectures and articles. "We try to organize them (the volumes) conceptually," he said.

By arranging the works of Nibley, Welch hopes to put Nibley's theories and scholarly pursuits into a final form that may be used as a reference for those studying the gospel.

According to Welch, the volumes contain notes written by Nibley, indexes, and scripture references that people can study and cite. He said there have been three volumes already published and that there should be 20 volumes in the finished work.

Doug Phillips, who wrote the foreword to the recently released volume of the "Collected Works of Hugh Nibley," considers Nibley's most important contribution to the LDS Church "his ability to see the historical consequences of the gospel." The third volume, "The World and the Prophets," illustrates Nibley's ability to relate these consequences to others, he said.

Volume III addresses the early days of the Christian church and explores the various stages of apostasy, starting with the Apostolic Fathers, going through the time of the Apologists, dark ages, and then ending with the restoration, said Phillips.

"He's trying to show how the restored church is really the same as the early church ... if taken point by point ... and therefore different than all other (modern) Christian churches."

The book illustrates how intellectualism filled the void left when true spirituality left the early Christian church, Phillips said.

According to Phillips, Nibley is "one of the most able defenders of the Church." He is the first man competent enough in the ancient languages to defend the Church within the scholarly realms.

Using ancient history, Nibley has been able to meet the attackers of the Church with substantial historical evidence, Phillips said. With books like "No Ma'am, That's Not History," and "Mythmakers," Nibley's historical defenses tend to leave the enemies of the LDS church baffled, Phillips said.

The next book, to be released to the public within the next few weeks, is called "The Prophetic Book of Mormon," Welch said.

Educator plays NEA program

National Education Association critic Samuel L. Blumenfeld will speak at BYU Thursday on the NEA and its effects on school-age children in America.

Blumenfeld, an author and educator who has taught in both private and public schools, has extensively researched the background of public schooling in America. He said he believes that, early in their history, public schools were forced to adopt radical teaching methods that have proven harmful to children.

According to Blumenfeld, these methods are still in use today and are a major cause for widespread illiteracy. He sites the "look-say" method as one example and compares it with the traditional "phonics" method.

"With phonics, a student could have a reading vocabulary of 24,000 words by the end of first grade," Blumenfeld said. "But with the commonly used 'look-say' method, the average child has only 1,500 words in his vocabulary by the end of fourth grade."

Blumenfeld has written several articles and books on the public school system and said he believes the NEA is a "political lobby and labor union which has institutionalized the destructive methods of the so-called progressives."

In addition, Blumenfeld said public school curriculum is blatantly left-wing. "The NEA is anti-family, anti-business and anti-religion," he said. "It's pro-abortion, pro-disarmament and it favors socialism in America and around the world."

"The NEA wants total control of all schools in America — even private schools — and plans to become a major political power."

Blumenfeld's topic will be "Are public schools harming your kids?" and he will speak at 11 a.m. Thursday in 375 EWLC. Blumenfeld's speech

'Compact cow' developed

TANLEON, Mexico (AP)—A university researcher who has developed a "compact cow" is trying to prove that smaller is better for milk and meat production.

Jose Manuel Berruecos' compact cow is a zebu, but it is one-half to one-third the size of a normal zebu, a bovine of Asian origin.

Berruecos, chairman of veterinary medicine at the National Autonomous University of Mexico, claims his 30 diminutive zebus are more efficient per acre than normal-sized cattle for milk and meat production.

"One normal zebu needs roughly 2 1/2 acres to maintain it," said Berruecos, speaking at the ranch in the north central state of San Luis Potosi where the animals have been bred. "The same extension of land can support 10 small cows (zebus)."

The zebu, recognized by a large fleshy hump over the shoulders and loose skin under the head, is valued for its resistance to heat, disease and insects.

According to experiments conducted by Berruecos and ranch owner Angel Castrillon in this arid, tropical area, the compact cow proved itself 200 to 300 percent more efficient in milk and meat production.

The compact cow weighs about 350 pounds, while a regular zebu averages 1,100 pounds.

Berruecos said the present herd of compact cows should increase from 30 to several hundred within 1 1/2 years by implanting embryos into cows.

Officials consider banning profanity

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Officials are considering toughening anti-harassment rules for city workers by banning profane language on the job.

Mayoral aide David Chandler said Tuesday that the use of sexually degrading language or racial epithets is forbidden by current anti-harassment rules. "It's my feeling that we may have to look at the use of abusive, profane language in the work place in general," said Chandler.

Concern about profane language stems from recent racial discrimination lawsuits against the city, Chandler said. He added that profanity was cited in the suits as adding to an abusive atmosphere.

Excavation help needed

By PAUL B. CARPENTER
Universe Staff Writer

Volunteers are needed to help BYU researchers excavate four ancient Anasazi Indian sites in southern Utah during the summer term. No previous experience is necessary.

"It's really an enjoyable experience," said Jim Wilde, archaeology co-director.

"People get to camp out while learning practical skills like surveying, excavating and mapping."

The sites are located about 10 miles west of St. George on the Santa Clara River.

Volunteers participate on a weekly basis. People can sign up to work for more than one week if they choose.

Students interested in working at the sites for the entire summer are also needed.

"We have two programs," said Jim Allison, field director. "The first program allows people to work at the sites on a weekly basis. The second program is the field school where the students work all summer and earn college credits."

Up to six credits in anthropology can be earned. Non-students can also participate. Students and non-students from all over the nation will be involved.

There are also various field trips planned throughout the term, including an archaeological survey in northern Arizona.

For more information contact Jim Allison at the Office of Public Archaeology at 378-4783 by June 10.

Auto theft suspects camped near Provo

A man and three male juveniles suspected of committing a rash of auto burglaries in the Provo area were arrested Monday as they camped in a wooded residential area, Provo police said.

Martin Harman of 100 N. 1090 West, Tooele, Utah, is being held in Utah County jail awaiting arraignment Tuesday. He faces charges of auto burglary and felony theft in connection with several burglaries that have taken place over the past week. Two of the youths are being held at youth home, while the third was released to his parents.

Provo Police Capt. George Pierant said they received a call from residents at the Willowbrook Condominiums, 1600 N. 800 West, who were concerned about several men who were camping in a wooded area near their complex.

When the police investigated, they discovered cameras and camping equipment, some of which had been reported stolen last week.

The incident is still under investigation.

Mathematicians visit, lecture at 'Y'

Mathematicians have come from all over the world to BYU this year to lecture and engage in research.

"BYU's math department now enjoys some world recognition," said Peter W. Gates, BYU associate professor of mathematics.

A lot of interaction has occurred," said Bates. "New theorems have been proven that were previously unknown."

The specific area of research has been in non-linear partial differential equations, nicknamed non-linear PDEs.

The practical applications of non-linear PDEs were explored by mathematicians from all over the world who were invited by Bates to visit BYU. Though the specifics of non-linear equations are complex, the basic concept involves using formulas to predict physical phenomena such as how electricity affect heart rates or the process of water moving through sand.

Applications of results include discovering the causes of sudden infant death syndrome and learning how pollutants seep into ground water. "The exciting thing is that the research has many applications," said Harker. BYU public communications administrator. Harker attended a session of the recent mathematics conference held at Snowbird resort.

Newly redesigned shuttle boosters to be tested

BRIGHAM CITY, Utah (AP) — Morton Thiokol Inc. plans to test a partially redesigned booster rocket Wednesday in its first full-scale test-firing since the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger.

The test rocket will be of the same basic design as the Challenger's twin boosters, but will include several new components, including built-in heaters to maintain a constant 75-degree temperature in O-rings that were identified as a possible cause of the Challenger disaster.

Some 300 NASA and Thiokol officials are expected to watch the two-minute horizontal test, in which more than 1 million pounds of propellant will be ignited in a 126-foot booster rocket, said company spokesman Rocky Raab.

Raab said Tuesday that preparations for the 1 p.m. MDT test were on schedule, but bad weather was a potential problem.

Last week a test-firing involving a nozzle joint on the booster rocket was delayed for 24 hours when lightning forced workers to halt preparations. Company officials ordered evacuation of the building where the nozzle simulator was prepared, for fear lightning would ignite the propellant.

National Weather Service forecasts said the chance of thunderstorms in the area of Thiokol's sprawling northern Utah test site on Wednesday is better than 40 percent. The test is preliminary to the August trial of a fully redesigned booster joint.

Engineers hope the heaters will maintain the flexibility of the O-rings, which help seal the three joints connecting segments of the solid-fuel booster rocket. The heaters should enable the rings to expand sufficiently during launch to prevent gases from escaping the joint.

A presidential commission said the Jan. 17, 1986 destruction of the Challenger and death of its seven-member crew may have been caused by O-rings that malfunctioned because of low pre-launch temperatures.

Investigators have said that freezing temperatures on the morning of the Challenger launch may have prevented the O-rings from expanding, allowing super-hot gases to leak from a joint and ignite the shuttle's external fuel tank.

As a further safeguard, the top two joints of the test rocket will be wrapped on the outside with graphite fiber.

The two upper joints on the rocket will have O-rings made of viton, the same rubbery material used in the Challenger O-rings. The third joint will be sealed with a silicon O-ring.

Carver Kennedy, Thiokol vice president for space programs, said on Saturday that the more flexible silicon O-ring is being tested as a possible backup. He said viton still is the preferred material because it better withstands high temperatures.

He said only the viton O-rings have been equipped with heaters for the test.

In addition to testing the new design features, scientists plan to attach numerous monitoring instruments to the test rocket to study the effects of joint rotation, or movement during launch that may cause O-rings to unseat. The rotation occurs when rapidly expanding gases force the sides of the rocket casing to bow outward.

The fully redesigned rocket joint will include an inner lip designed to strengthen the joint and take pressure off the O-rings, Carver said.
